

State Government Information

Publications from state agencies are the primary sources of information about Oklahoma and state government programs. This collection provides free and open access to more than 27,000 publications with information on health, education, wildlife, tourism, and more!

There are digitized versions of selected historical print publications dating back to 1978 and digital publications from 2006 to the present. For historical state print publications before 1978 use the Digital Prairie collection archives.ok.gov.

Since the collections include older documents that have since been superseded, visitors are urged to always refer to the most recent version of a document for current information.

Visit digitalprairieok.net to view more online collections from the Oklahoma Department of Libraries.

Oklahoma digitalprairie@ is also your gateway to powerful EBSCO reference resources made possible in part with funding from the Institute of Museum and Library Services. The resources include information on health, education, legal, and business issues. Plus, access millions of full-text magazine articles, explore hobbies, and get homework help!—digitalprairieok.net/discover

The opinions expressed do not necessarily reflect the position or policy of IMLS, and no official endorsement by the IMLS should be inferred.